In ABSTRACT;

A method for manufacturing cards and envelopes decorated with embroidered fabrics is provided. Various kinds of drawings are embroidered on a fabric with threads of different colors. Firstly, a paper is cut into the shape of ~~this invention~~ a long rectangle which is divided into three equal sections and one of which, the first section, has a window at the center therefore and three trapezoidal wings are formed along the three edges thereof, to one end of the short side of the rectangle, opposite to the first section, is connected a distorted trapezoid along the bottom side of which one trapezoid wing is developed. The first sheet of card stock is folded into four portions. A part of the first portion of the card stock, the frame, is cut out of various shapes such as heart, square, and star. The embroidered fabric is cut into a certain size and adhered to the rear side of the frame, on which peel off glue is attached, without applying any heat or pressure. The front side of the paper frame is decorated with, including but not limited to, various kinds of paintings, pictures, phrases and emblems. The ~~card of this invention~~ card may be used as, including but not limited to, a season's greeting card, a congratulatory card, a business card, an ~~invitatory~~ invitational card, a post card, and an ~~envelop~~ envelope for previously recommended cards.
